DOING HARD TIME?

Sentencing the Jacksons will be no easy task

Chicago Tribune

WASHINGTON Former Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr. is looking at prison time, but there's an outside chance his wife, Sandi, could get probation, according to legal experts interviewed by the Tribune as the couple prepares for sentencing.

The Jacksons will learn their fate Wednesday day after a fall from grace in which he quit Congress, she resigned from the Chicago City Council and both pleaded guilty to felonies involving a spending spree with $750,000 in campaign cash.

In interviews, lawyers and law professors predicted that Jesse Jackson Jr., 48, would receive a prison term of about two to four years and that Sandi Jackson, 49, might get probation but otherwise would be ordered to serve four to 18 months.

The experts said the case poses tough issues for the sentencing judge:

How much slack, if any, should Jackson Jr. get because he reportedly has severe depression and bipolar disorder?

How much stock should be put in the argument that Sandi Jackson should retain her freedom so that she can care for their 13-year-old daughter and 9-year-old son?

How to style a punishment that sends the proper messages to the Jacksons, to a scandal-weary public and to other elected officials tempted to go astray?

"It's indisputably true that the bigger they are, the harder they fall," observed Ohio State University law professor Douglas Berman, the author of a book on sentencing and a self-described "sentencing geek."

"Do we acknowledge the hardness of their fall, or are we still going to get our pound of flesh? That's never been fully sorted out by the law."

About the sentencing

Former Rep. Jesse Jackson Jr. and his wife, former Ald. Sandi Jackson, are scheduled to be sentenced Wednesday in Washington at the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. Their hearings are scheduled to start at 8:30 a.m. Chicago time. TRIBUNE

SANDI JACKSON

The approximate amount prosecutors say she did not declare in taxable income. She pleaded guilty to one felony count of filing false U.S. income tax returns.

POSSIBLE SENTENCE

1-2 years

The amount of time, under sentencing guidelines, she faces in prison. Her lawyers want her put on probation.

FINANCIAL PENALTY

$168,550

The amount she agreed to pay in her plea deal. Under the guidelines, she also faces a fine of $3,000-$40,000.

JESSE JACKSON JR.

THE CRIME

$750,000

The amount prosecutors say he mispent from his campaign fund. He pleaded guilty to one felony count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud, mail fraud and false statements.

POSSIBLE SENTENCE

46-57 months

The amount of time, under sentencing guidelines, he faces in prison, but the judge is not bound by that range. His lawyers have urged leniency.

FINANCIAL PENALTY

$750,000

The amount of the money judgment forfeiture he agreed to pay in his plea deal. Under the guidelines, he also faces a fine of $10,000-$100,000.

THE JUDGE

U.S. District Judge Amy Berman Jackson will pronounce the sentences. She took over the case in April from Judge Robert Wilkins, who accepted the Jacksons' guilty pleas in February. Judge Jackson has familiarity with a convicted congressman: As a defense attorney before her appointment to the bench, she represented Rep. William Jefferson (D-La.), who was found guilty of corruption after authorities discovered $90,000 in cash in his freezer.

WHO GOES FIRST?

If both Jacksons are sentenced to prison, it seems very likely that they will be allowed to serve one at a time. At issue is the care of their children, ages 9 and 13. Prosecutors have proposed that Sandi Jackson go first, but Jackson Jr. wants to do his time first if both get prison sentences.

Get ready to rail against your station—it's time to play the shame game. It's the fifth annual Going Public Crust Station contest to honor the worst CTA rail station, based on crabby rider complaints.

Every summer GP solicits your suggestions for the CTA station most in need of a makeover. In the past, riders have submitted haikus, lengthy arguments and dirty pics to support their votes.

Your complaints have not gone unnoticed. The three-time winner of this contest, the Wilson Red Line station in Uptown, will get its face-lift next year.

The CTA is expected to soon announce the contractor for the Wilson overhaul, which will include transforming the station into a transfer stop for the Purple Line.

In past years, GP has named the winner based on total number of votes. This year, passion and creativity will be greater factors than vote tally.

CAST YOUR VOTE!

Use imagination for your station. Please submit your nomination to GP by 5 p.m. Friday via email (tswartz@tribune.com), Twitter (@tracyswartz) or the Web (facebook.com/theredeye).

DOES YOUR STATION MAKE THE CUT?

Nominate stations based on four criteria: accessibility, amenities, cleanliness and customer service.

» Amenities: Little bike parking? Few train trackers? No elevator?

» Cleanliness: Overflowing garbage? Peeling paint? Sticky floor?

» Customer service: Is the customer service agent catching shut-eye? Does the call button feel more like a stall button?

STATIONARY A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note

This week: Foster Purple Line

School isn't in fall session yet for Northwestern, but the CTA already has started its homework. In May, the agency began a seven-month project to reduce the slow zones along the Purple Line. Construction on the section that includes the Foster stop is expected to last until October. This will be a big relief for Purple Line riders. About 28 percent of the Purple Line was under slow zone last month, while Purple Line Express trains traveled 35 mph or slower on about 37 percent of its track in July, according to a map on the CTA's website. Let's just hope when this project is over, the CTA receives a good grade for its work. Next up: Monroe Blue Line

CORRECTION The Chicago Park District hired the Trust for Public Land to run the Bloomingdale Trail project described in Monday's cover story. The Trust decided to call the project the 606 with city support. The story incorrectly characterized who hired the Trust.

CHICAGO CAN'T HEAR YOUR TUMMY GURGLE, BUT IT CAN READ YOUR ANGUISHED TWEETS

Chicago Tribune

When Juan Anguiano fired off a tweet about a bout of food poisoning in April, he thought he might hear back from sympathetic friends or pick up a new follower.

"I wasn't expecting the city of Chicago to tweet me and ask me to file a report," said Anguiano, an editor for Univision.

Still, that's pretty much what happened. Since April, an automated application has been searching Twitter for posts that include the words "food poisoning" by people who identify themselves as Chicagoans.

Several volunteers then contact some of those people and suggest they complete a form that goes to the Chicago Department of Public Health. "I actually filled it out and thought it was awesome," Anguiano said.

The health department says more than 150 Chicagoans have been contacted since the initiative, called Foodborne Chicago, began. In its first month, reports triggered 33 restaurant inspections, some of which uncovered violations, officials said.

"We wanted to try to reach out to Chicagoans in many different ways, and we know that a lot of people are on Twitter," said Health Commissioner Bechara Choucair. "If they are experiencing food-related illness, they won't always pick up the phone and call us, but they will tweet it."

But is combing Twitter for the words "food poisoning" really a useful way to crack down on dirty food service establishments? Although many people who become sick blame the last thing they ate, experts say that meal is often not the culprit.

According to the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, foodborne pathogens can trigger symptoms of illness a few minutes to several weeks after contaminated food is ingested, which makes it tricky to pinpoint the source of food poisoning.

Food safety attorney Bill Marler is well aware of the vastly different incubation periods for foodborne pathogens, but he thinks the idea still may end up being helpful—or, at least, not hurtful.

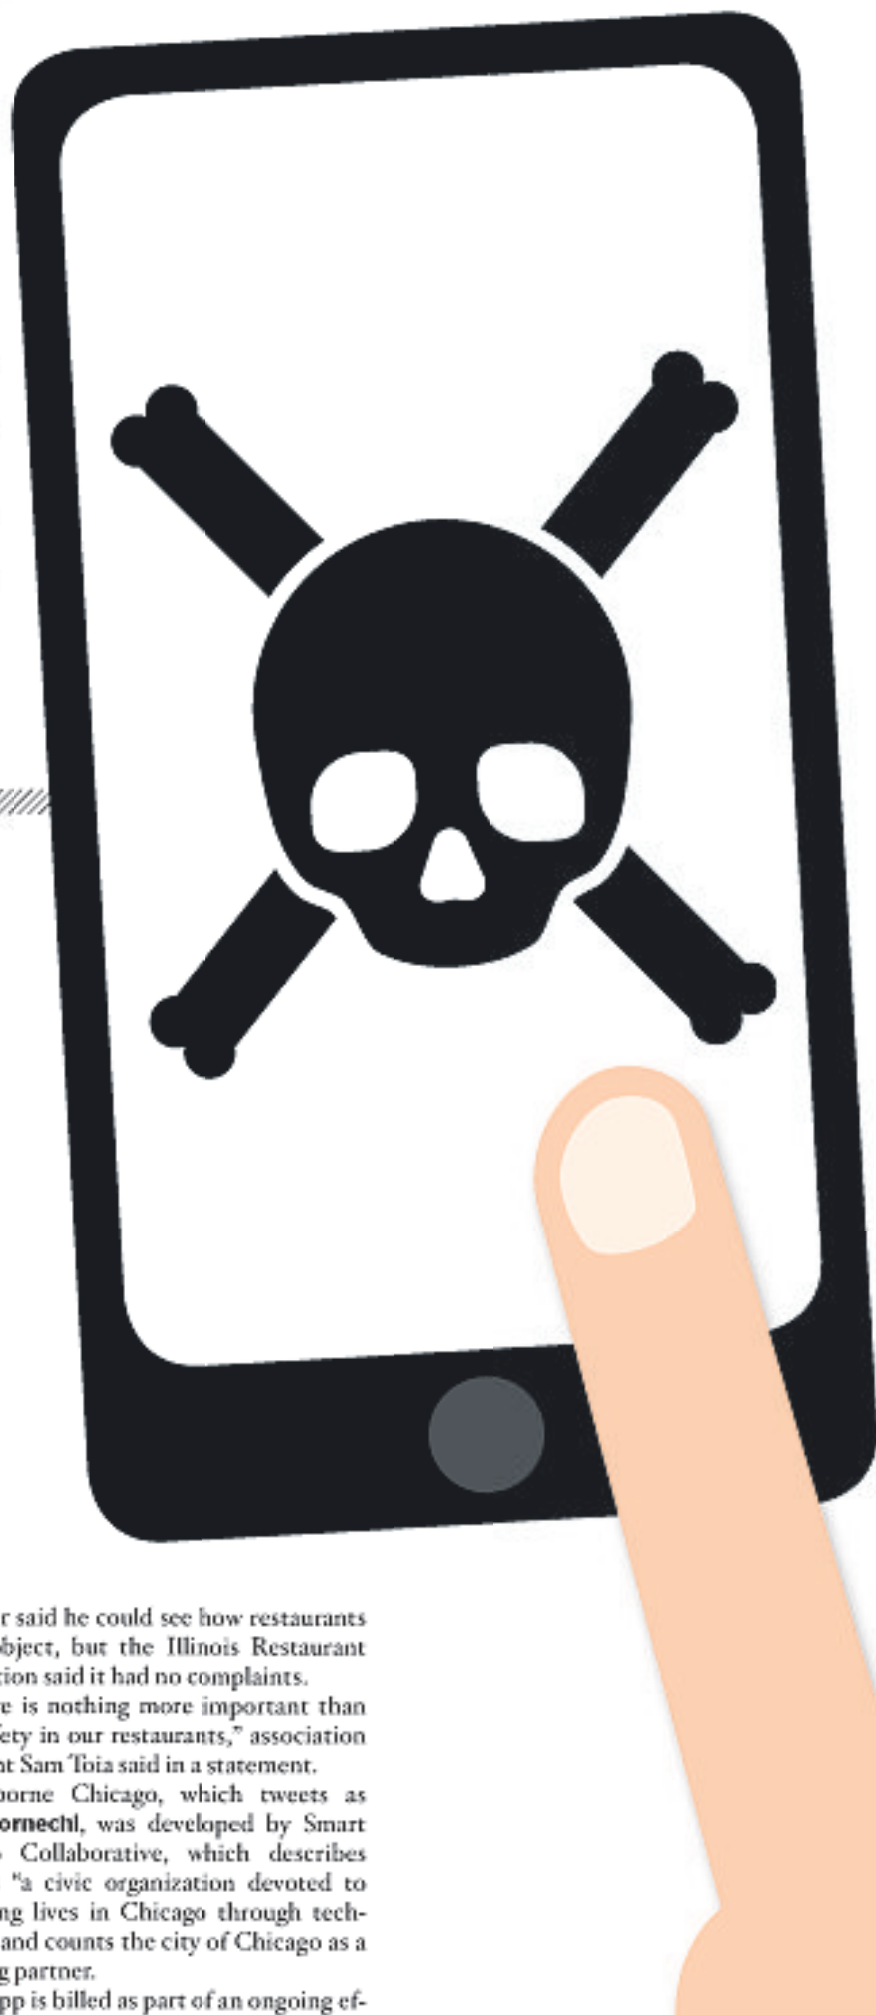

"If the health department is using it for people to say, 'Hi, I suspect I just got sick from this restaurant' or 'I just went to this place and it's just a mess,' then I don't see a problem with doing inspections based on that," Marler said. "They should be doing inspections anyway. So it's probably no more or less accurate to use inspections to respond to a consumer complaint, even if the consumer might be incorrect. They are either going to find a problem or not find it."

Marler said he could see how restaurants might object, but the Illinois Restaurant Association said it had no complaints.

"There is nothing more important than food safety in our restaurants," association President Sam Toia said in a statement.

Foodborne Chicago, which tweets as @foodbornechi, was developed by Smart Chicago Collaborative, which describes itself as "a civic organization devoted to improving lives in Chicago through technology" and counts the city of Chicago as a founding partner.

The app is billed as part of an ongoing ef-

“[The health department] should be doing inspections anyway. So it’s probably no more or less accurate to use inspections to respond to a consumer complaint, even if the consumer might be incorrect.” —Bill Marler, food safety attorney, on using Twitter reports to trigger restaurant inspections fort by the health department to use technology to make its services more transparent and accessible to citizens. In the past couple of years, officials have placed all health department inspections online, nearly in real time, and posted progress on various health initiatives on a regular basis.

With the expansion of social media, complaints of suspected food poisoning, news of regional outbreaks and general whines about food service establishments have gained audiences well beyond their previous scope.

Marler noted that after a listeria outbreak in Canada a few years ago, researchers examined the number of people from the region who had searched online for the bacteria’s name. “Big data” may be useful “in tracking outbreaks when you can see that a lot of people are searching for the same help,” he said.

Some Chicago tweeters who heard from Foodborne Chicago said they thought twice about reporting their favorite restaurant but hoped doing so would protect other people and help identify larger outbreaks.

“Food poisoning can be kind of vague, so whether or not they use social media, it is going to be difficult to find claims that have provable grounds,” said Nicole Rohr, an interactive content producer at WYCC-Ch. 20 who got sick in May. “But it’s worth looking into, especially if there is an establishment where multiple people get sick. That’s when I think it can be really helpful.”

Marler agreed that explicit tweets with locations and symptoms could help connect the dots.

“I could see where I’m in the hospital and I ate at these three restaurants and then someone tweets that they ate at one of them and now they have bloody diarrhea, too,” he said. “You could see where that could generate the outlines of an outbreak. But it’s got to be used very wisely.”

Triathlete Myles Alexander, who tweeted about food poisoning that he suspected contracting at a favorite Italian restaurant, said he thought the new program might best be used to detect repeat offenders.

“If they get enough red flags about one specific restaurant, that can show that they need to pop on by and do another inspection,” said Alexander, who fell ill after eating fish soup.

Some of the tweets about food poisoning that are accessible through Foodborne Chicago’s Twitter feed call out restaurants by name. According to Marler, even if the information turns out to be inaccurate, a libel claim against the tweeter is unlikely to succeed.

“It’s complicated, but the short answer is that it has to be knowingly false,” Marler said. “The only time a customer would have a problem would be if they absolutely knew that the food was not the cause of their illness but they said it just to harm the restaurant.”

Commissioner Choucair said most of the people contacted through the program are “excited to know that we are listening.” He sees it as another way for government, citizens and technology to join forces to make Chicago a better place.

“We are always looking for new opportunities to leverage innovations to improve food safety,” he said, “but we need the help from Chicagoans.”

Even if that help is just sharing—or even oversharing—about your tummy troubles on Twitter.

Who’s passing inspection?

There have been more than 11,000 inspections in Chicago from Jan. 1 through Friday, according to the most current data in the city’s data portal. Everything from bakeries to day care facilities to grocery stores are on the list, which provides a detailed inventory of all violations and classifies them by severity.

Of all locations classified as restaurants, 62 percent have passed inspection, 16 percent have failed and 10.5 percent have “passed with conditions,” meaning serious or critical violations were found but corrected during the inspection. The remaining inspections either found the restaurant to be out of business, inaccessible or not locatable.

New media and public health

The goal of the new Foodborne Chicago application is to serve as a bridge between people who get food poisoning and the Chicago Department of Public Health, which responds to complaints and inspects restaurants. The app was developed by the Smart Chicago Collaborative, a civic group that tries to use technology to improve the lives of Chicagoans. Here is how the process works:

- 1 A Chicago resident feels sick and broadcasts his or her unease on Twitter.
- 2 The Foodborne Chicago application uses an automatic algorithm to collect the tweet because it includes the words “food poisoning” and comes from within the city.
- 3 A volunteer reading collected tweets replies to the ones that appear to refer to an actual case of food poisoning.
- 4 The resident is encouraged to fill out an electronic form that will relay the information to the Chicago Department of Public Health.
- 5 The department may launch a restaurant inspection based on the report. Calls to 311 also inform inspection plans.
- 6 People who make a report via the online form receive an email with an incident number that allows them to track their claim via servicetracker.cityofchicago.org.

4-year-old girl, latest child victim of violence, is expected to recover

Chicago Tribune

As bullets started pelting the car that they were riding in Sunday night, Javier Rosario says he and his best friend both quickly covered his 4-year-old sister in the back seat to try to shield her from the gunfire.

But Shyla Rivera was still hit in the right thigh, becoming the latest youthful face of Chicago violence—this time on the Northwest Side. In the last month and a half, eight children who were 7 or younger have been shot in Chicago, mostly on the South and West sides, according to a Tribune analysis.

"I started ... bursting [into] tears when I seen her when she was shot," Rosario, 17, who was wounded in the left leg, said as he balanced himself on crutches outside the family's West Side home on Monday.

Rosario, Shyla and the friend were all shot in the back seat of their Nissan Altima by a gunman from a moving vehicle that had pulled beside them in Portage Park, but all three sustained non-life-threatening injuries, police said. Two others, including Jose Silva, also a brother of Shyla, were uninjured in the front seat.

Chicago police said the victims first noticed a beige or gray Infiniti G35 at Central Avenue and Irving Park Road at about 10:20 p.m. According to preliminary police reports, the vehicle continued north on Central ahead of the Altima, but the Infiniti eventually drew alongside. A passenger leaned out a window with a gun and opened fire, police said.

"I just remember seeing a gun and him biting his lip and shooting," said Rosario's friend, who didn't want to be named. "I thought they were BB [pellets]. I didn't feel anything until the ambulance came."

Silva, who was driving, made a U-turn, drove to a 7-Eleven at Irving Park and Central and flagged down a police officer. Rosario said he grabbed a bag of ice from the store for his sister until the paramedics arrived.

Rosario said his sister wasn't crying and even kept telling him that she didn't want to go to the hospital.

"She's a tough son of a gun. She took it better than I did," he said.

Cops: Bystander foils mugging

By Rachel Cromidas

REDEYE

Two Washington Heights teenagers were arrested Sunday morning after one of them ripped a cellphone from a woman's hand at a bus stop and fled—only to be foiled by a good Samaritan, county prosecutors said.

The 24-year-old woman was listening to music and waiting for a bus at 95th and Ada streets, prosecutors said, when Dennis Herrion, 18, of the 1200 block of West 97th Place, grabbed her iPhone from her hands with so much force that it "ripped and damaged" the ear buds, which were in her ears.

The woman saw him get into a red Chevrolet, she later told police officers, and speed off, taking her phone and her wallet.

According to prosecutors, an unknown witness chased after the teenagers in a car and demanded they return the cellphone, which they did.

After the witness returned the cellphone, the woman called police to report the mugging, prosecutors said.

EXPRESS LINES

- » A Chicago man was ordered held without bail Sunday for his alleged role in the June killing of a 5-year-old boy and his mother, as well as what prosecutors say was his attempt later the same day to have his accomplice murdered.
- » Five people were in custody Monday after they tried to take a man's bicycle and messenger bag while on a Blue Line train, police said.
- » Three Cincinnati women riding a rented bicycle on North Avenue Beach were confronted Saturday by a group of teens, one of whom is accused of stealing one woman's iPhone, police said. TRIBUNE

U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder said Monday that the Justice Department plans to change how it prosecutes some non-violent drug offenders. AP/WIDEWORLD

Feds lessen drug sentences

The Justice Department will no longer pursue mandatory minimum sentences for certain low-level, nonviolent drug offenders, Attorney General Eric Holder said Monday, noting the nation is “coldly efficient in jailing criminals,” but that it “cannot prosecute or incarcerate” its way to becoming safer.

“Too many Americans go to too many prisons for far too long, and for no truly good law enforcement reason,” Holder told the American Bar Association’s House of Delegates in San Francisco.

He questioned some assumptions about the criminal justice system’s approach to the “war on drugs,” saying that excessive incarceration has been an “ineffective and unsustainable” part of it.

Although he said the United States should not abandon being tough on crime, Holder embraced steps to address “shameful” racial disparities in sentencing, the budgetary strains of overpopulated prisons and policies for incarceration that punish and rehabilitate,

“not merely to warehouse and forget.”

Holder invoked President Obama, saying the two had been talking about the issues and agreed to try to “strike a balance” that clears the way for “pragmatic” and “common-sense” solutions to enhance public safety.

The centerpiece of Holder’s plan is to scale back prosecution for certain drug offenders—those with no ties to large-scale organizations, gangs or cartels. He said they would no longer be charged with offenses that “impose draconian mandatory minimum sentences.”

They now “will be charged with offenses for which the accompanying sentences are better suited to their individual conduct, rather than excessive prison terms more appropriate for violent criminals or drug kingpins.”

The changes are effective immediately. Lessening the use of mandatory minimums could mark the end of the tough-on-crime era that began with strict laws in the 1970s and accelerated with mandatory minimum prison sentences and so-called three-strikes laws.

‘Whitey’ Bulger found guilty

James “Whitey” Bulger, a brutal gangster who ruled over Boston’s criminal underworld in the 1970s and ’80s and evaded capture for 16 years, was found guilty of murder and racketeering by a jury Monday and will likely spend the rest of his life in prison. Bulger’s sentencing was scheduled for Nov. 13.

‘Stop-and-frisk’ ruled unconstitutional

A U.S. judge on Monday ruled the New York Police Department’s “stop-and-frisk” crime-fighting tactic unconstitutional, calling it “indirect racial profiling” because it targeted racially defined groups, resulting in the disproportionate and discriminatory stopping of tens of thousands of blacks and Hispanics.

Israel to release 26 from jail

Israel named 26 Palestinians on Monday whom it will free from jail this week under a deal enabling U.S.-backed peace talks to resume. But the goodwill gesture was clouded by new plans to expand Israeli settlements that the United Nations and European Union condemned as illegal.

Valor Games help vets connect, recharge, serve

By Riley Blevins | REDEYE

When Al Velasco is racing, his thoughts manage to escape the barbed-wire outpost he once called home.

For a moment, the former Marine isn't thinking about the bullets he narrowly ducked in Iraq. He doesn't see the faces of his eight comrades who weren't so lucky. On the course there are no night sweats. No flashbacks. No demons left over from Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"It's an unbelievable feeling to push all that aside," the 33-year-old Schaumburg resident said. "I can't explain it."

Velasco loves to race. But he doesn't do so with his legs—he does so on a hand cycle. Velasco is paralyzed from the chest down. On Oct. 3, 2007, he fell asleep at the wheel, slammed into the median and was flung from his car.

He's completed several races aboard his hand cycle since his accident. But the one this week is different. He's competing alongside fellow disabled veterans as part of Valor Games Midwest.

Velasco, a training coordinator for the Oak Park Police Department, plans to compete Wednesday in power lifting. (He was scheduled to compete in a cycling event Monday, but fell sick.)

"It'll be nerve-racking being in front of so many people. I don't like the spotlight," he said last month. "But other than that, it's going to be an amazing experience."

The Valor Games bring an added bonus to competing for Velasco.

"Not too long ago, I wasn't ambitious enough to try something like [the Valor Games]," he said.

Velasco has come a long way since returning from duty in 2005. He struggles with post-traumatic stress disorder. But even with all the pain, he hasn't forgotten the exhilarating highs of active duty. In fact, he misses Iraq.

"Our country is amazing. I was honored to serve my country—honored," Velasco said. "But I miss being out there [in Iraq]. It's not the fighting I miss. It's the camaraderie."

Velasco speaks just above a whisper. But when he talked about the future and helping veterans, his tone dipped to a stern, confident baritone.

"I just want to help my fellow vets, sir. I think it's fate," he said. "Everything is pushing me there. So it's what I'm going to do. I'm going to keep helping. Who knows? Maybe I'll even compete in the Paralympics one day."

He's currently training for the Chicago Marathon in October.

SNAPPY

You never know how much you need a long snapper until one cracks his rib. Hmm, wonder what would happen if one of our panelists did that ...

1	What should Bears long snapper Patrick Mannelly do for his cracked rib?	Baby cracked baby cracked baby cracked, Mannelly's baby cracked rib.	Try to find the broken woman from which she was created.	Stay away from anything with pollen.	12-year-old me is trying to do a joke about "long snappers." It's not going well.	Put some Famous Dave's BBQ sauce on that sucker!
2	If there's one thing the Bears' recently signed long snapper should know, what would that be?	It's not fair to deny me of the cross I bear that you gave to me.	Lose the mustache. We know it's you, Urlacher!	What it feels like to be Jay Cutler.	Adam Podelsch likes to get his hands under center. Those hands are warm. Very warm.	If you crack a rib and sit out the season, don't plan a big "return" campaign.
3	Falling for the hidden ball trick in baseball is like my signature sex move.	... falling for the hidden wedding ring trick in dating.	... having a blonde moment.	... thinking you're going to score with the preacher's daughter after prom: inexcusable and sad.	... when my kid fails for "got your nose!"
4	Who said this: "I think my voice could be huge in that situation"?	Leury Garcia.	Every mother-in-law in history.	Anthony Weiner in a Sexters Anonymous meeting. Oh, a voice ... never mind.	Vincent Price, from the dead, upon hearing the release of "Thriller 2."	I did. My voice is huge in most situations. It's the job ...
5	Who is Leury Garcia?	A guy considering walking into a library.	The guy Riley Cooper pretends to be in public?	Hopefully a winner.	I think he's the guy who Leuryed me into a pyramid scheme! Heyo!	A guy who's supposed to make my heart stop breaking from Alex Rios. "sniff"

Brian Urlacher
JOHN J. KIM/TRIBUNE FILEHe won't pull a Favre

Just how little does Brian Urlacher miss playing football? The retired Bears linebacker said that when cornerback Charles Tillman came by his house Saturday, Urlacher asked him: "What are you doing? Why aren't you at camp?" Urlacher didn't even realize the Bears had played the previous night at Carolina.

Calm before the crazy

'Orange is the New Black' star is on a good path

Los Angeles Times

The women in this summer's lauded Netflix series "Orange Is the New Black" are as colorful as the orange jumpsuits worn by the inmates of Litchfield Prison, where the show is set.

Though they live within the confines of the same barbed wire fence, the prisoners' backgrounds are radically different, forming a mosaic of backgrounds and personalities. "As the show goes on, they peel back the layers, and you get deeper in knowing who these people are," said Uzo Aduba, who plays Suzanne "Crazy Eyes" Warren, one of the series' breakout characters.

If prison was a playground, Crazy Eyes would be the last one picked at recess. With her bulging eyes, wild hair and bizarre mannerisms, she's both mocked and feared by the other prisoners. She carries a torch for Piper, the lead character, which she expresses in inappropriate ways, including urinating outside Piper's bunk.

For Aduba, an actress of Nigerian descent with a stage background, creating such an outrageous yet complex role was aided by a staging direction that described Suzanne's "child-like stare."

"I think sometimes Suzanne can be misunderstood," the 32-year-old Aduba said. "There's some intensity, but it's so pure where she is coming from. Children don't filter, they just act and speak."

She saw Crazy Eyes as both funny and heartfelt. "I try to play serious scenes a little funny and the comedy a little serious," said Aduba, who made Crazy Eyes' gestures exaggerated to reflect her child-like nature.

Uzo Aduba on 'Orange is the New Black'

Created by Jenji Kohan ("Weeds"), "Orange Is the New Black" is based on a memoir by Piper Kerman, an upscale Brooklyn writer who was sentenced to 15 months in prison for her brief involvement in a drug ring. Netflix debuted the 13-episode first season on its streaming platform in July and immediately renewed it for a second season.

Aduba is the daughter of Nigerian parents who immigrated to the United States in the 1970s and settled in Massachusetts. Her name translates to the saying "the road is good."

She started off singing in her church choir as a child but it wasn't until later, when she was studying classical voice at Boston University, that she decided acting might be the better road. So she moved to New York and Broadway became her dream: "I remember when my mom dropped me off at the train station she said, 'Just work hard.'"

Hollywood takes to Chicago sky

By Leonor Vivanco | REDEYE

The Chicago Air & Water Show won't be here until this weekend, but downtown workers and residents may notice other aircraft swirling around the city.

The movie "Jupiter Ascending," starring Channing Tatum and Mila Kunis, is filming aerial stunts this week, according to a newsletter emailed by Ald. Brendan Reilly's (42nd) office.

The stunts involve low-flying helicopters between 5 and 7 a.m. Monday around the Willis Tower, near Daley Plaza at Clark and Washington streets Tuesday and the Chicago River locks and the lakefront Wednesday, the newsletter said.

The stunts will be filmed through Aug. 26 in some locations and include stuntmen being suspended from the aircraft.

The newsletter said there will be periodic road closures and safety perimeters at the sites where helicopters are flying at low elevations. The helicopter staging and landing zone is at a lot in Pilsen.

TEEN'S CHOICE

Miley Cyrus is a pro with a surfboard trophy

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

They may not be the glitziest, glammiest or the most famous awards in the land, but the Teen Choice Awards sure can sling a good surfboard. Mind you, these are choices made by teens, so they're not always ... mature. Enter Miley Cyrus. She's just out of her teens herself, but she's graduated to the next level when it comes to red-carpet posing and making faces. We rounded up and named a bunch of her best moments from Sunday night's ceremony—plus how we think fiancé Liam Hemsworth would react. DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA, GETTY IMAGES PHOTOS

THE DIGIT
5.9 million Number of viewers who watched Sunday's midseason premiere of AMC's "Breaking Bad," the most-watched episode in the show's history.

HOT DATE
FEB 6

That's when Jay Leno will host his last episode of "The Tonight Show," deadline.com reports. Jimmy Fallon's reign on the show begins Feb. 24, and we can expect approximately a 900 percent increase in laughs.

Perfect role

It's as if he were born to play this part. Deadline.com reports Vin Diesel is in talks to play ... a tree. Yes, that's right. The muscle man would star as Groot, the talking tree in Marvel's "Guardians of the Galaxy," along with Benicio del Toro, Zoe Saldana, Glenn Close and Chris Pratt.

Lea Michele

This one's for Cory

Throughout the celebrations at Sunday's Teen Choice Awards, Lea Michele also made time for a tribute. The "Glee" star dedicated her choice TV actress-comedy award to her late co-star and boyfriend, Cory Monteith, who died last month. "For all of you out there who loved and admired Cory as much as I did, I promise that, with your love, we're going to get through this together," she said.

DON'T MESS WITH GAGA

YOU GUYSSSSS, you're not supposed to listen to Lady Gaga's new song until Aug. 19!!!! Snippets of Gaga's new track, "Applause," ran rampant around the Internet last weekend, sparking some serious Twitter fury from Mother Monster. "Lord, in HEAVEN WHY." "YOU JUST COULDN'T WAIT THIS IS TOO MUCH FOR ONE SATURDAY," she screeched, but released the full version Monday.

Fame monster

Does Jennifer Lawrence have psychic powers? "I was going to be a mom, and I was going to be a doctor, and I was going to live in Kentucky," she told Vogue magazine for its September issue, "but I always knew that I was going to be famous." One of the perks of being famous: making David O. Russell's "American Hustle." "She's a manic-depressive alcoholic, and I couldn't wait. Plus, I got to make out with Christian Bale," Lawrence said of her character. Some people have all the luck.
